2018 Educator Excellence Awardee

Mallory C. Brown was born in the Philadelphia area but has been suffering through anti-Flyers hate at the hands of Penguins fans in Pittsburgh since 2012. She completed her graduate program at the University of Pittsburgh where she graduated summa cum laude with honors in her teaching observations. She is a secondary English teacher with a fondness for the Oxford comma and a belief in using creative writing as a way to teach literacy skills and literary understanding. Prior to moving into education, Mallory was a literary agent with Triada US Literary Agency where she represented young adult novels. She is always using her young adult publishing knowledge to give her students book recommendations and to bring relevant texts into the classroom.
